Biography

A native of Honolulu, Hawaii, Dale Slemons was reared in Tennessee. He served on active duty in the United States Air Force for 12 years, with tours of duty including Germany and the United Arab Emirates during the Persian Gulf War.

During law school, Dale worked at the Washington, D.C. law firm of Miller & Van Eaton, P.L.L.C. assisting in litigation in the communications arena. After law school, he worked for Martin & Seibert, L.C. in Martinsburg, West Virginia, and was their Workers' Compensation Department Manager. While at Martin & Seibert, Dale was responsible for representing General Motors throughout West Virginia.

When Red Flags Just Can't be Overlooked

September 1, 2023

The purpose of the Georgia Workers Compensation Act is to provide immediate medical care and wage replacement or income benefits for injured workers. But once these "red flags" are present the question arises: What can I do to stop this type of action and deter others from attempting the gain unwarranted workers compensation benefits?

Telecommuting: The Wave of Future Workers' Compensation Claims

August 29, 2019

Written by: Dale Slemons, Esq. A rapidly growing trend in today's fast paced, technological era is telecommuting for more and more workers. More employers are permitting their employees to work at home as a benefit to the worker and a cost saving measure for employers. In today's society, where more and more companies are becoming
