Biography

Fajorah Bolds is an associate in the Augusta office, where she practices in the areas of aging services, health care, insurance coverage, and medical malpractice. She assists clients in navigating complex litigation and regulatory matters, with a commitment to providing thoughtful and effective representation.

Before joining HBS, Fajorah gained valuable experience through multiple legal externships and research roles. At a law firm in Knoxville, Tennessee, she supported attorneys in insurance defense and medical-related cases by conducting legal research, drafting motions and memoranda, and assisting in litigation strategy. She also served as a legal extern with the Office of the DeKalb County Solicitor General, where she reviewed criminal case files, helped prepare discovery, and observed proceedings across various court calendars.

Earlier in her career, Fajorah worked as a Research Assistant at the University of Georgia School of Law, collaborating with faculty and students on criminal defense matters and researching resources to aid state and federal inmates. She also gained public service experience as an administrative assistant for the City of
