Biography

Samuel Wilson is an attorney in the Little Rock office, where he represents clients in a broad range of matters involving agribusiness and food law, business litigation, environmental and toxic tort claims, intellectual property disputes, premises liability, products liability, and transportation.

Prior to joining the firm, Samuel defended corporations in high-stakes products liability and toxic tort litigation, including agricultural and asbestos-related matters. He also represented local businesses in a variety of civil defense matters, gaining experience managing litigation strategy, drafting responsive pleadings, conducting discovery, and assisting with trial preparation.

Samuel's background also includes experience in intellectual property and technology commercialization. While serving as an intellectual property analyst intern with University of Arkansas Technology Ventures, he conducted market and intellectual property research on emerging technologies, prepared reports and recommendations regarding IP protection, and worked with companies exploring intellectual property licensing opportunities.
